

MUTANT AMERICA:

Some Metaphors for Turtle Island

Sam: Many people have likened societies to machines that use people as production resources.

Kris: That's a bad metaphor. I prefer to think of societies as a living organisms that are constantly growing, adapting, and changing.

Ted: Really? Well, I think of American society as a toxic, dying organism. It has poisoned the planet and now it is poisoning itself.

Tim: (pausing briefly while sipping a cold campari) We should be careful about the metaphors we use. They have a way of sharing not only our world views, but also the outcomes of our actions.

- T Newfields
Beg.: 2002 Nagoya ≡ Fin.: 2020 Yokohama

