

UNDER PAR?

Some Thoughts about the Presidency of George W. Bush

As the President drives his golf cart how many are being driven from their homes?

While he lifts a titanium club from his bag
how many missiles are being clubbed or gagged?

As he frets about a lousy tee-off stroke
how many millions will become broke?

As he drives his ball hard across lush greens
how many others starve unseen?

If his ball goes too far will it cause another military spar?

And when his ball sinks into the final hole
what will be lost to reach that goal?

Sam: D'ya think that most presidents have golf course mentalities?

Tim: I wish. At least in golf there are rules that must be followed, but some presidents are like dictators who think they're above the law.

Kris: And in golf the whole performance is open, but who knows what moves are made in secret by top executives?

Sam: You idealize golf.

Ted: No, you idealize politics! Who said that politics was a gentle sport? In the end, isn't there only one winner?

Tim: With that way of thinking, in the long run everybody loses
